Hollywood is an entertainment business in North America, New Zealand, and Australia that produces feature-length films, short films and television programs including animations. It is supported by the Motion Picture Association (Hollywood), an advocacy group of studios, that collect revenue from movie tickets, DVDs and other sources to cover revenues in relation to the production for the film industry. Hollywood also owns the entire segments in music through Time Warner Music Group.

Bollywood is a term used for Hindi-oriented films made in Mumbai (formerly Bombay) in India. Bollywood constitutes more than 80% of the total Indian film industry's revenue with international box office receipts of $2 billion every year. The name "Bollywood" is a mix of Bombay (now Mumbai) and Hollywood, the center of the American film industry.

An Indian language film, also known locally as a Hindi film, is a Bollywood or Hollywood that is made mainly in India, often in several regional languages of India. These are also called "domestic films" due to their limited overseas market compared to Bollywood films. They are produced primarily in one of the major Indian languages of Hindi, Telugu, Tamil, Kannada and Malayalam. Other than English-language Bollywood films, these are also often subtitled or dubbed into English or other foreign languages on DVD/TV release for international markets. The Hindi film industry based in Mumbai is the largest in the world in terms of revenue. It receives a major share of worldwide box office receipts with an average "Bollywood" film grossing around US$35 million in India and US$100 million overseas. Bollywood's iconic song "Jai Ho" from its movie Slumdog Millionaire is one of the most commercially successful Hindi songs. Some of the most well-known Indian films include Kabhi Haan Kabhi Naa (1969), Sholay (1975), Do Bigha Zamin (1978), Gandhi (1982) and Lagaan (2001).
